Critical Thinking

31. Face the Issue

The Supreme Court has held that "the right to privacy is not absolute, and, under appropriate factual circumstances, may be held to be inconsistent with other valued constitutional rights." Explain the Court's reasoning in this case.

32. Determining Relevance

According to Justice Holmes, one of the most important protections offered by the Bill of Rights is the right to privacy. "The Court has held that a government cannot interfere with the privacy of individuals." Explain the significance of this protection and why it is so important.

33. Drawing Conclusions

The Supreme Court has held that the government cannot engage in "unreasonable searches and seizures." Explain the significance of this protection and why it is so important.
